KENTUCKY UNABLE TO MEET OBLIGATIONS.

Treasurer Makes Public Announcement of Fact to Mason County Jailer.

CASH LOWER THAN EVER BEFORE.

Must Pay Warrants Issued for the Maintenance of Charitable Institutions, Etc.

HOPE TO ARRANGE MATTERS SOON.

Frankfort Ky., June 21.—With the treasury in a depleted condition and probably lower in funds than ever before, except in 1896, it may be necessary to call an extra session of the Legislature to provide money with which to run the departments of the State government. Capt. Ed Farley, State Treasurer, in a letter which he wrote to the jailer of Mason County to-day, says that every effort is being made to avoid the necessity for an extra session. In case an extra session is called it would be called for the same purpose as was the extra session of 1896, when interest-bearing warrants were authorized. This is a way to meet the difficulties which are presented, and it may be that Gov. Willson will call the extra session, probably in the winter.

Capt. Farley wrote a letter to the jailer of Mason County to-day explaining why warrants are not being paid by the State, and he gives some pertinent and timely statements regarding the financial condition of the State at this time. The letter is as follows.

The Hon. W. W. Livian, Jailer of Mason County, Maysville, Ky. Dear Sir: Your letter of the 16th inst., informing me that you hold auditor's warrant No. 7087, of May 5th, 1908, for $520.30 which you put in bank for collection, and which was returned unpaid, received.

I regret that funds are so low in the treasury at this time that we are unable to pay many of the warrants that are issued for the maintenance of the charitable institutions, penitentiaries etc., and they take precedence over the other character of warrants. The reason for the shortage of money at this time is simply because it has been used in payment of current and past due bills.

When I assumed the duties of this office, on January 7, there was turned over to me something over $1,100,000, but on the morning of the 5th of the month, one day after taking office, there was presented a warrant for payment of in the neighborhood of $600,000, covering bills that ought to have been paid months before. This was followed in quick succession by other warrants for past due claims, until within three weeks time, after taking charge of the office, something over $900,000 was paid out on claims months previous. This together with current bills left the treasury almost empty and it has been a struggle since to keep the machinery of the State running.

This will be the case until the sheriff begins to turn in taxes gathered this fall after which time we hope to be able to meet warrants as they are drawn.

I believe that the treasury is at present lower in funds than it has ever been before, except perhaps in 1896, where the incoming administration at that time found no money on hand and nearly a million dollars of outstanding warrants past due, and you will remember that an extra session of the Legislature had to be called at that time, and interest-bearing warrants authorized issued to meet the dilemma. We hope to manage affairs this year year so that it may not be necessary to call an extra session of the Legislature, and only ask our friends to be a little patient for a short time. The Auditor usually audits all claims that come in and issues warrants which are sent to the claimant, so that he may, if he sees fit, use said warrants in bank as collateral for such accommodations as he may need for a short time. When funds sufficient to meet all outstanding warrants are on hand, the public will be duly notified and all such warrants paid.

E. FARLEY.

Capt. Farley showed the letter to acting Gov. Cox to-day, and the latter suggested that it would be well to print it, so that the public could know the exact condition of the State Treasury and why warrants are not being paid. The financial stringency has become alarming and there is serious talk of the necessity for an extra session. It has been suggested that the Governor might call an extra session and ask that the appropriation for the state normal schools be cut down one half. This was the largest appropriation made and the Governor is known to be sorry that he ever signed it.

When the taxes begin to come in the treasurer will be able to tell how he stands and whether or not an extra session is necessary. But until then there will be considerable uneasiness, as the Governor, it is said, does not want an extra session.

Not Guilty.

Benton, Ky., June 20.—A verdict of not guilty was returned by the jury in the case of Sam Colly, charged with participating in the raid on Birmingham on the night of March 9th. The jury had the case since yesterday at noon, and the verdict was returned ten minutes after court had convened this morning. The jury in the case of Burnett Phelps was discharged yesterday afternoon at the adjournment of court, as it was unable to reach a verdict.

Six stood for conviction, while six held out for acquittal. The same evidence was offered in the trial of Phelps as was given in the trial of Colly.

He has been threatened with death in Lyon county, and since his confession, which was secured by Attorney Krone, he has been residing in Paducah. Mrs. Dean has also been here.

Dear Marshall:

Yours truly,

GEO. H. CRIDER.

The mines near Salem, this country, are now running with a full force and the output of zinc, spar and lead, it is said, will be the largest this season than ever before.

Several new companies operate in this field this year and the outlook for a prosperous year is almost assured. Salem is certainly coming rapidly to the front in mining circles and her citizens should feel good and very proud.

Prof. and Mrs. J. R. Brunson and little daughter, who have been visiting Mr. and Mrs. J. Frank Presnell for several days, left Tuesday for Union county where they will spend the summer.

MINNESOTA GOVERNOR OPPOSED TO EXPEDIENCY IN POLITICS.

SPEECH AT LOUISVILLE

Given a Wonderful Ovation at the Jefferson Day Dinner in the Kentucky City—A Promise of Victory.

Gov. Johnson of Minnesota, who was a specially invited guest at the Louisville Jefferson day dinner, and who really made the principal address, was given applause commensurate with a man of his ability and his high station. He was cheered when he entered the banquet hall, the big gathering stood on its feet, cheered and waved napkins as he was introduced, cheered his dramatically delivered speech and gave him what must have been a most gratifying ovation as he concluded his prayer that the times might bring forth another Jefferson to teach the faith of him who has gone before and prevent the leaders of today from going off into the desert of unknown situations. He declared that he sometimes viewed with alarm the conditions of the present generation, but he believed in time to come all would be right and the principles of equality and justice and the Democratic party would triumph.

The latter part of the governor's speech was as follows:

"I realize, my friends, that on the grounds of expediency executives are sometimes prone to temptation to do things which are not justified by the written law of the country.

I believe that the written law of the country has a majesty which compels the allegiance of every man who lives under the government, and I should like to see the time come in this country again when we were willing to abide by the constitutional forms of government and not be ruled by those expediencies which change with the tides. I remember in the history of Henry of Navarre, that plumed knight who led the hosts from one camp to another fighting for a sacred cause. When he became king of France, on the ground of expediency, he renounced the old faith and took up a new which he had been fighting, and what became of the people by whom and with whom he had been fighting all the years of that tumult and trouble? They disappeared as the dew before the morning sun and the Huguenot had to come to America to live.

Gov. Johnson appeals to the people regardless of party, because he has a record of achievement behind him that guarantees that if he is chosen to the great office of president he would fill it in a manner wholly satisfactory to a vast majority of the plain people of America.

Poor Swedish immigrants.

Gov. Johnson's mother and father were poor immigrants from Sweden—the former arriving in St. Peter, Minn., in 1852, and the father a year later. They were married in 1853. The father was a blacksmith in Sweden, and took up his trade in his new home, conducting at first a small blacksmith shop in the country near St. Peter. Later the family moved into the village, and it was here, July 21, 1861, that the son John was born. The father was cursed with the drink habit, and, in consequence, after a few years of prosperity, the family was reduced to desperate straits. So dire was their poverty that the mother had to take in washing for a living, and the son, John, acted as her delivery boy. When in his twelfth year, the destitution of the little family, consisting of the mother and father and three children, had reached such a point that John begged his mother for permission to quit school in order to help her. She reluctantly consented, fearing that her son would never be able to return to school. This fear was fully justified, for after that time the future governor of Minnesota knew the four walls of the schoolroom no more.

The boy went to work in a general store in the village at $10 a month, and every cent of this generous salary was turned into the family treasury. His spare moments from the store were still devoted to delivering laundry for his mother, and the earnings of mother and son were sufficient to keep the little establishment going. As time went on their condition improved with John's increasing salary. Two years after going to work he was receiving $12 a month; soon he was getting more. From this time on the mother was not compelled to work for the family maintenance. The son provided the entire income, and the mother returned to her proper work of housekeeping and caring for the family. From the general store, John went into a drug store, where he stayed for about twelve years and became a licensed pharmacist. Later he was employed by a railway contractor in Minnesota and Iowa, and at that time, in his early 20's, his income averaged about $75 a month. All this time, whether at home or away, he regarded himself as the hand and mainstay of the family, and provided funds in addition for educating the brother and sister who survived early childhood.

Not Embittered by Poverty.

Although John had thus to leave school so early in life, he did not cease to educate himself. He became a great student and soon read every book in the village library. It is noteworthy that the first three books he read after leaving school were Prescott's two histories of the conquest of Peru and Mexico and Scott's Ivanhoe. While thus extending his knowledge and intellectual horizon, he at all times grew in the other fields of life. Hard as his struggle had been, he did not become embittered by it, but took as large a part as possible in the village social life. He seldom missed a dance. He attended church and belonged to the choir. He joined the various fraternal lodges, after the habit of men in small villages. He was known to everybody in the village, and everybody was his friend. He was interested in life, not only his own

JOHNSON THE MAN

HE IS THE IDEAL AMERICAN CITIZEN AND STATESMAN.

A MAN OF THE PEOPLE

His Record of Achievement a Guarantee to the Nation—Compared Favorably with Lincoln—a Self-Made Man.

John H. Tolan, a lawyer of Anaconda, Mont., a lifelong acquaintance and friend of Gov. John A. Johnson of Minnesota, writes in regard to the latter's candidacy:

"You are taking the proper steps—a campaign of education is what is needed to secure his nomination. Once let the American people get close to this man, learn his early history and struggles, as I know them; feel his friendship, as I have felt it; see his intense love and kindness for his fellow man, as I have seen it, and no power on earth can deter them from placing him at the head of our federal government."

Mr. Tolan has summed up briefly one side of the great governor of Minnesota. He is a most lovable man—a man who makes friends of all whom he meets. In this respect, as in some others, he has been compared to the great Lincoln.

Gov. Johnson is a man of the people. Not even Lincoln came up from great obscurity and greater poverty than the virile governor of Minnesota. He understands the people as perhaps no man in American public life since Lincoln has understood them—and the people understand him.

As a Democrat, Gov. Johnson appeals to the thoughtful members of his party, because he is preeminently qualified to unite and bind his discordant elements into a competent, enthusiastic, well-organized militant political force.

Gov. Johnson appeals to the people regardless of party, because he has a record of achievement behind him that guarantees that if he is chosen to the great office of president he would fill it in a manner wholly satisfactory to a vast majority of the plain people of America.

Poor Swedish immigrants.

Gov. Johnson's mother and father were poor immigrants from Sweden—the former arriving in St. Peter, Minn., in 1852, and the father a year later. They were married in 1853. The father was a blacksmith in Sweden, and took up his trade in his new home, conducting at first a small blacksmith shop in the country near St. Peter. Later the family moved into the village, and it was here, July 21, 1861, that the son John was born. The father was cursed with the drink habit, and, in consequence, after a few years of prosperity, the family was reduced to desperate straits. So dire was their poverty that the mother had to take in washing for a living, and the son, John, acted as her delivery boy. When in his twelfth year, the destitution of the little family, consisting of the mother and father and three children, had reached such a point that John begged his mother for permission to quit school in order to help her. She reluctantly consented, fearing that her son would never be able to return to school. This fear was fully justified, for after that time the future governor of Minnesota knew the four walls of the schoolroom no more.

The boy went to work in a general store in the village at $10 a month, and every cent of this generous salary was turned into the family treasury. His spare moments from the store were still devoted to delivering laundry for his mother, and the earnings of mother and son were sufficient to keep the little establishment going. As time went on their condition improved with John's increasing salary. Two years after going to work he was receiving $12 a month; soon he was getting more. From this time on the mother was not compelled to work for the family maintenance. The son provided the entire income, and the mother returned to her proper work of housekeeping and caring for the family. From the general store, John went into a drug store, where he stayed for about twelve years and became a licensed pharmacist. Later he was employed by a railway contractor in Minnesota and Iowa, and at that time, in his early 20's, his income averaged about $75 a month. All this time, whether at home or away, he regarded himself as the hand and mainstay of the family, and provided funds in addition for educating the brother and sister who survived early childhood.

Not Embittered by Poverty.

Although John had thus to leave school so early in life, he did not cease to educate himself. He became a great student and soon read every book in the village library. It is noteworthy that the first three books he read after leaving school were Prescott's two histories of the conquest of Peru and Mexico and Scott's Ivanhoe. While thus extending his knowledge and intellectual horizon, he at all times grew in the other fields of life. Hard as his struggle had been, he did not become embittered by it, but took as large a part as possible in the village social life. He seldom missed a dance. He attended church and belonged to the choir. He joined the various fraternal lodges, after the habit of men in small villages. He was known to everybody in the village, and everybody was his friend. He was interested in life, not only his own life, but the life led by all his friends.

The turning point in Gov. Johnson's career—the point from which he began to be a public man—came with the opportunity to become editor of the village paper—the St. Peter Herald. That the opportunity was given to him, a man who had been without any newspaper training or preparation was proof that early in life he began to impress those who knew him as a man provided with a natural equipment which qualified him to undertake almost any responsibility. The owners of the paper picked him out as the man they wanted for editor. He immediately arose to the opportunity. He developed great aptitude for the new work, and with it took on a larger service in the community.

Sitting around the big stove in the drug store during the long winter evenings, he had imbibed Democratic principles from the local politicians who had congregated there, and, as time went on, he became fixed in his belief in Democratic political tenets and a loyal adherent of the party. Johnson had a natural gift for speaking, and as he had now become a man of note in his little home community, he had many opportunities to exercise this gift, and soon came to be recognized as a fluent, easy, adaptable speaker, always certain to say the right thing at the right time, and always sure to say something worth hearing. Between his speaking ability, his ability as an editor, and his remarkable mixing qualities, he was scarcely 30 years old when he was recognized as the leading Democratic editor of Minnesota.

First Political Contest.

The governor's first political contest came in 1894, when he was nominated for the state senate, but although he made a gallant fight he was not able to overcome the Republican majority. In 1896, nominated to the state senate again, he made a lively campaign on state issues, and this time victory was with him. He served through two sessions of the legislature, and his legislative career was chiefly notable for the leadership of his party in the successful contest for a gross earnings tax on the Minnesota railways. At the end of his legislative term, the Democratic leaders of the state wanted to nominate him for governor, but Johnson considered the situation hopeless and declined the honor. Instead, he took the nomination for state senate again. But this time he was defeated by a small majority. In 1904 he was persuaded, however, to accept the Democratic nomination, and, after being nominated by acclamation, he plunged into a whirlwind campaign. He made 103 speeches in 74 out of the 84 counties of the state, and these speeches were remarkable for the fact that they were positive rather than negative. He did not attack his opponent or indulge in personalities, but spoke always of state affairs and needed reforms. This was in a presidential year, when Roosevelt enthusiasm was at its height in every Republican state. But when the votes were counted in November it was found that the people of the state at large had learned to love, honor, admire and respect John A. Johnson, as had the people of his native village. Although President Roosevelt carried the state by the hitherto unknown plurality of 161,000, Johnson was elected by about 8,000.

After an administration of two years, which made good every pre-election promise, Gov. Johnson came once again before the people of Minnesota with the slogan, "One good term deserves another," making 119 speeches in 42 days. This time, without any presidential canvas to distract them from state issues and personalities, the governor was re-elected by a plurality of 77,000, being the largest plurality ever given to a gubernatorial candidate in Minnesota. And it is by virtue of that handsome public verdict of approval that Gov. Johnson to-day sits in his office in the magnificent marble capitol at St. Paul—perhaps the finest specimen of state architecture in America outside of Washington—looked up to with genuine love, respect and confidence by the 2,000,000 people of Minnesota.

A Great Record.

In the four years that he has been governor, John A. Johnson has accomplished great things in Minnesota. He and his tax-reforming apprentices have increased the assessed valuation of the United States Steel corporation from $32,000,000 to $190,000,000, and in view of further increase of taxation, the steel corporation is now building a $20,000,000 plant in Duluth.

Owing to his energy railway rates have been reduced, partly voluntarily, and partly by warehouse commission regulation and legislative enactment, from 10 to 30 per cent. The two-cent railway passenger rate was secured in Minnesota. Largely due to his initiative, the system of taxation was reformed, and an expert commission of three able men appointed to deal with the taxation problem: laws were passed providing for the equitable taxation of sleeping car companies; a modern law of mortgage taxation was also enacted; reciprocal deregulation laws were adopted; orders of the railroad and warehouse commission were made immediately effective. In the interest of labor a free state employment bureau was created and is conducted with the best results. A great system for the drainage of state swamp lands was inaugurated. A law was passed providing for municipal ownership of public utilities. The state of Minnesota has long conducted a twine factory with prison labor, the object being to supply the farmers of the state with a binding twine for harvesting their crops at a reasonable price and protect them from the excessive charges of the cordage trust. To compete with this factory, the trust constructed a twine plant within the state. Gov. Johnson's answer was a request to the legislature for authority to sell the product of the state, outside the state, as well as within the state. At Gov. Johnson's suggestion, railway passes were abolished in Minnesota.

The governor's part in the insurance reforms of recent years is too well known to require attention here, beyond allusion to the fact that President Roosevelt publicly recognized him as the leader in the nation wide insurance companies.

Gov. Johnson is a man of strict adherence to political principle, but he does not believe in confusing every passing fancy or fad with political principle. He believes that there are a few basic political ideas which characterize Democracy. He is not a man who was a Republican yesterday, a Democrat to-day and an Independent to-morrow. Throughout his career he has been a Democrat.

Although there can be no question that Gov. Johnson is a believer in sweeping tariff reforms, and a believer in the necessity for vigorous legislation to meet certain modern industrial conditions, he has such an abundance of common sense, so much intellectual balance, and is so tactful in his methods that he achieves his ends without that excessive friction and violent disturbance that has been characteristic of some of our recent reformers. Gov. Johnson is a big man. He is not wedded to a particular political fad. He is in statesmanship something of an opportunist. Although guided by some big principles, he prefers to decide questions as they come up on their individual presentation.

As a Democratic candidate he is strong, because between his genuine devotion to reform and his careful and effective methods of getting reforms, he should have no difficulty in uniting in his support both the conservative and radical elements in his party. This should insure him the normal Democratic strength, carrying with it, of course, the solid south and such states as New York and New Jersey. In addition, Gov. Johnson will draw an immense Republican vote from Scandinavian-American citizens, as well as other classes, in such states as Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Montana, Nebraska and Washington. There is no question that he could carry Minnesota and the two Dakotas, Wisconsin and Illinois.

MORE POWER TO JOHNSON.

He is a Man Who Has Risen on His Merits. —

Hon. John A. Johnson has risen from the ranks on his merits. He has won a fair degree of material prosperity, not by the reckless arts of a dalmatique, but by the constructive work of a citizen who grows up in and with his country.

He has political power because he has deserved public confidence. However any of us may disagree with some of his political ideas, he is recognized by all who have taken the trouble to learn anything about him as a man of sound and sincere character.

He is a self-made man who is well-made—who has done a good job in the making of himself. As to his general attitude toward the questions of the day, it is enough to say that he is not a man who believes in burning the barn to kill the rats.

He is exactly the kind of man that what Mr. Bryan calls "the plain people" are glad to see come forward for high office. They recognize him as one of themselves and are proud of him with good reason.

John A. Johnson of Minnesota is doing what he can. More power to him and to all like him. The republic needs the help of all of them.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

VAST RESPONSIBILITIES.

A Short Extract from a Notable Speech by Gov. Johnson.

We are confronted by vast opportunities and responsibilities, and with lost ground to recover. A bad economic policy and political treachery cost us the benefit of commercial freedom with Canada. Had we been fair and decent with our sister country across the boundary, the trade of Canada would have been ours, and commercially if not politically the two countries would have been one. We are told it is now too late. Canada has grown away from us, instead of toward us. A false policy has robbed us of our own. Congressmen elected to represent our interests in reciprocity with Canada have gone to Washington in the interests of a pipeline combine and worked to make reciprocity impossible.

The American flag ought now to

Had Hopes.

After having read Judge Blackburn's statement in regard to who paid the soldiers I had hopes of peace and reconciliation, but there is no peace, there will never be as long as some unknown person condemns the head official of our county, and accuses him of misrepresenting facts. The Hebron items, say we all endorse the article, "If not, why not?" I for one do not, and I think there are others.

In regard to Mr. Pogue's letter, he says he would be far from plucking the laurel that should adorn the brow of another. That sounds very complimentary to an article that was written, it seems with the intention to cause discord and disunion among the citizens of our county. As to whether or not we need soldiers in this county, I for one am perfectly willing to leave that to the county officials and the governor.

Mr. Pogue says the work of the Night Riders was finished some time ago. Then he says the mission of the soldiers no one has been able to fathom, the cause of their coming is past finding out. Now if he will go to Mr. Cardin's farm, then to Dr. Johnson's, stop at Frederica, take the next south bound train to Princeton, on to Kuttawa and see the sights, where once used to be great factories, I think he should be willing to shake hands with the judge and say, "amen to your actions, instead of saying the wicked flee when no man pursueth." He compares the conditions of our county to King George's soldiers on the streets of Boston, the victories of Lexington and the heroes of Yorktown. Now if I had been he, I would have left that off, and fired at Fort Sumpter and shouted on to Richmond.

It seems that he don't agree with the unknown as to who pays the soldiers, he says, he hopes that good vitals, good cloths and the state treasury, will be the only victims of their steel. The other man said go to the bank and see if the county didn't pay.

Old Kentucky is a great state, her soldiers are noble boys. The bones of her sons falling in great struggles now mingled with the soil of many states and in Foreign Lands. But I shall enter on no encomium upon Kentucky. Here she is—behold her and judge for yourselves. Her past reputation for good soldiers is secure. If discord and disunion shall wound it, if party strife and blind ambition shall hawk at, and tear it, if folly and madness, if the credit of its soldiers goes down, it will stand in the end by the side of that cradle in which its infancy was rocked, it will stretch forth its arms with whatever vigor it may still retain over the friends who gather around it, and it will fall at last, if fall it must, amidst the proudest monuments of its own glory and on the very spot of its origin.

United we stand, divided we fall.
Yours for Peace and Union.

TOBACCO CONCERN

Want Towns to Pay the Guards
For Guarding Their Property.

A recent dispatch from Paducah says: The city of Paducah, the town Murray or Calloway county and other towns and counties in the tobacco growing district where night rider depredations and scare have existed will have to reimburse the Regie tobacco buyers for the amount they have paid out for special guards to protect their property or face expensive law suits, according to information that has been received in Paducah.

T. J. Stahl & Co., the Regie buyers of Paducah have already made out their bill against the city of Paducah amounting to $236 and since the council refused payment are preparing to bring suit in circuit court to recover. It is said that it is the opinion of State officials that the city must pay the bill. Stahl claims that ex-Mayor Yeiser gave him authority to put on guards at the city's expense and that Detective Moore selected the men and put them in charge of the warehouse at night.

Probably the heaviest expense the tobacco buyers were subjected to was at Murray, where the county and city officials are said to have refused guards and they were put on by the buyers themselves. Four to six men were regularly employed, while on nights when attacks were expected, notably the fourth Monday in March when, according to the later confessions of a night rider, was the time a raid was planned on the town, 25 guards were put on.

At Mayfield, Fulton, Wickliff and other places where independent buyers were stationed guards were put on at private expense and an effort will be made to recover the amounts expended.

Letter From Texas.

Graham, Texas, June 11, 1908
Mr. S. M. Jenkins

I will comply with my promise to my friends in old Kentucky. Twenty-one months has past since I and my husband bid good-bye to friends and loved ones and turned our faces westward toward our home in Texas. Oh! how time flies. I have made many friends here, but none like my old Kentucky home folks. I have been blessed with good health and an appetite to eat any thing that I can get, and there is any thing here that there is any where to eat.

Texas is a fine country and all the fault I have with Texas, is the high winds and hot sun. Our bed-room is out in the back yard among the tarantulas, centipedes and horney frogs and listen to the howl of wolf which makes the hair rise on any one's head.

Marion's bunch of ball players handed Princeton an awful wallop Tuesday afternoon by the score of 3 to 1.

The baseball dictionary does not contain enough words to tell just what happened.

First Princeton did not do much playing, making eleven errors. Second they would not run the bases, Grimes arm being in perfect shape. Furthermore in Gossage Marion had a slabman whose benders proved as crooked to Princeton batsman as a snake when in the sun, striking out 17 men besides pitching a shut out game. The feature of the game was the battery work of Gossage and Grimes and the fielding of T. Mitchell for Princeton. The score.

Robt. Coffield Dead.

Only six months ago we recorded the death of the wife of Robt. Coffield of McAlester, Oklahoma. It is now our painful duty to record the death of Mr. Coffield, which occurred at his home there on last Friday June 19th, 1908.

He had been in declining health for two years past and the death of his wife seem to crush out his remaining strength, he growing weaker and weaker until relieved by death.

He was 75 years of age and a native of Kentucky. He was Post master here, prior to 1893 at which time he moved to Illinois, and to Indian Territory now Oklahoma in 1897, but never forgot old friends nor the hills and rocks of his dear old state and county.

He leaves five daughters and two sons, Mrs. Geo. Smith and Misses Lillian and Lucile Coffield all of Louisville Ky., Mrs. R. S. Towle of Harrisburg Ill., Mrs. Shannon Smith, Evertson and Norma Coffield of McAlester Oklahoma. Mr. Coffield is well known here to most of our people who held him in high esteem. No man ever stood higher for honesty or integrity than Robt. Coffield and the news of his death will be sad for those who knew and loved him Pease be to his ashes.

TAFT AND SHERMAN

This is the Ticket the Republicans Present to Consideration of Electorate.

TAFT NAMED ON FIRST BALLOT

On Thursday the Culmination of Great Convention Came in Naming Secretary of War For President.

Congressman James S. Sherman Was Named For Second Place After Brief Session on Friday.

Incidents of One of the Most Interesting Conventions in the History of the Party.

For President of the United States, WILLIAM H. TAFT of Ohio.

For Vice President—JAMES S. SHERMAN of New York.

Taft on the first ballot, Taft by 702 votes; Taft by the unanimous choice of the convention.

Such is the record of the culminating day of the Republican national convention of 1908, effected amid scenes of tumultuous enthusiasm and after a nerve-racking continuous session lasting nearly eight hours.

A bust of expectancy hung over the assembly as the ball proceeded. Hasty summaries showed that Taft was far in advance. When New York was reached the Taft column tallied 427. Ohio carried the Taft total to 551, or twenty more than enough to nominate. Still the ball went on until the final result was announced by Chairman Lodge:

"For Theodore Roosevelt, 3 votes; for Joseph B. Foraker of Ohio, 16 votes; for Charles W. Fairbanks of Indiana, 10 votes; for Joseph G. Cannon of Illinois, 61 votes; for Robert La Follette of Wisconsin, 25 votes; for Charles E. Hughes of New York, 63 votes; for Philander C. Knox of Pennsylvania, 68 votes, and for William H. Taft of Ohio, 702 votes."

Following is the vote for the unsuccessful candidates:

Canion—Illinois, 51; Michigan, 1; New Jersey, 3; New York, 3 Total, 58.

Fairbanks—Georgia, 1; Indiana, 39; Kentucky, 2; New Hampshire, 3; New Jersey, 2; South Carolina, 2 Total, 40.

Hughes—New York, 65; Virginia, 2 Total, 67.

Foraker—Georgia, 8; Ohio, 4; South Carolina, 2; Virginia, 1; District of Columbia, 1. Total, 16.

Knox—New Jersey, 1; Pennsylvania, 64. Total, 65.

La Follette—Wisconsin, 25.

Roosevelt—Pennsylvania, 3.

A great shout went up as Lodge concluded his announcement, and with one accord the cohorts of Cannon and Knox and Hughes and the others joined in a common tribute for the candidate of the party.

With Congressman James S. Sherman of New York, chosen as vice-presidential candidate and running mate of Secretary Taft, the Republican national convention passed into history Friday.

The Formal Opening.

The Republican national quadrennial convention was called to order at noon Tuesday, Harry S. New of Indiana, chairman of the Republican national committee, wielding the gavel amid a scene of party splendor rarely, if ever, equalled. The vast auditorium of the Chicago Coliseum had been decorated as never before for the occasion, and its seating arrangements, systematized to the last square inch, were hardly adequate for the throng which filled the great structure, every man and every woman on the tip-toe of anticipation.

Chairman New's attitude in calling the convention to order was business personalized. Captain New never attempted oratory, and his terse, crisp sentences announcing the object of the convention created an excellent impression. Bishop P. J. Muldoon of Chicago was then introduced and in eloquent manner made a plea for divine guidance in all the deliberations of the body thus assembled.

Following the formal presentation of the gavel to the chairman, the call for the convention was read by Elmer Dyer of Ohio, secretary of the Republican national committee, and Senator Burrows of Michigan, temporary chairman, was introduced. The venerable senator, his shaggy beard much whiter than when he last attended a national convention, but with no diminution of vigor in person or voice, addressed his great audience on the record of the party during the four years since the last convention, concluding as follows:

"The work of this convention will soon be concluded. The platform will voice the dominant thought of the people, and the candidates nominated must stand upon it firm and erect. They must have the patriotism and sagacity of a Lincoln, the tenacity of a Grant, the wisdom and moderation

"In this spirit we must prevail—by this sign we must conquer."

We believe in equal rights for all men and are opposed to special privileges for any man, or any class of men, high or low, rich or poor. We, who established the gold standard, are pledged to the cause of sound finance.

We stand for protection to American industry and American labor, and we will resist all the assaults of free trade under whatever name it comes disguised. We will see to the defense of the country. We mean to have a navy worthy of the American name. We seek peace and friendship with all the nations, but alliance with none. Yet we have no intention of being a "little nation." The great services of the president to the world's peace will be continued by the party which he has led. We are a party fit to rule and govern, to legislate and administer and not a fortuitous collection of atoms whose only form of thought or motion is to oppose. Above all, we are true to our traditions and to our past. True now, as we were in the days of Lincoln.
